Check Your Male! Men Standing with Survivors to Create a Culture of Consent

Sexual Assault Awareness – Violence Prevention
Healthy Relationships – Loving Kindness

Let's upgrade the conversation about sex and consent!

Exploring the impact of societal expectations, inadequate education, and mass media on how we perceive sexual relationships, Check Your Male—Standing with Survivors (SwS) takes a candid look at how men can become advocates for ending sexual assault in their communities.

Participants experience:

- An engaging, solutions-focused presentation tackling male identity and the ongoing crisis of “rape culture”
- A series of strategies for men to proactively prevent sexual assault
- An interactive Q&A discussion to jump start critical conversations about moving towards a more open, empathetic, and just community

This isn't a lecture, so much as a detailed invitation for men to recognize their power and privilege as resources for helping build a healthier sexual environment.

Facilitator:

Graham Hackett draws from a deep personal history of supporting women in his family and community who've experienced abuse. As an educator, he also spent years working youth service organizations like Outward Bound, the YMCA, and closely with juvenile inmates in a maximum-security detention facility, designing a program to provide young men with observation and communication skills to better understand themselves and relate to their circumstances.

The son of a Viet Nam Veteran and a Hippie nomad, Graham's heightened cultural awareness comes naturally. Exploring the value of art for personal empowerment and social uplift, he's traveled extensively across the US (and briefly abroad) to serve urban, rural, affluent, and disadvantaged communities with enriching arts experiences and educational opportunities...

As a veteran stage performer, educator, production coordinator, event producer, and social justice advocate, Graham Hackett fully comprehends the power and potential of art as a cultural resource.
